Experience of a Country Editor.

[From Texas Siftings.] It is when he comes to write panegyric on the stock of groceries owned it will poll anywhere from one-quarter and for sale by one of his advertising to three-quarters of the Republican patrons that the country editor throws his whole soul into his work-that he unshackles his fancy and devastates Louis, where she completed a course of inthe whole English language. He han- struction in the Moody cutting system, and dles his lofty theme with graceful ease from the moment that he introduces the merchant prince on the scene until, with Ciceronian eloquence and rounded periods, he describes the last bottle of imported pickles on the In the Circuit Court of Iron County, Missou shelves of "the mammoth establishment of our worthy and honored townsman." The chief recreation of the country editor is punctuating, with a blue pencil and a pair of shears, voluntary communications on "Temperance," "The Uses and Abuses of the Potato Bug," "Ensilage as a Means of Grace," etc. When he has a contro-day time for him, and gives him leisure to pay off the arrears of cussing that he feels he owes the advertising agents who try to seduce him into inserting a five-inch display advertise-ment, top of column, next to reading matter, one year, for $7.50, payable in matter, one year, for $7.50, payable in wooden type and patent can-openers. The country editor is usually a good fellow, and, in the spirit of progress and in all that pertains to the advance and in all that pertains to the advance third part of the west half of lot 1 of the of modern civilization, he is generally far ahead of his surroundings.

The West Plains Journal says the Postmaster of that town tells the following joke on himself: A man came into the office and asked the Postmaster if he would please write a letter to his old mother, as he wasn't very ready with a pen. The accommodating official consented, and wrote the letter at the man's dictation. At the conclusion of the letter the writer looked up and asked if there was anything else. The man said he reckoned that was all, but innocently told him to add at the bottom: "Please excuse bad spelling and writing."
